TITLE? _____

Beyond the rolling hills, the setting sun threw out blood red and violet rays like a fan. The tall, dry grass swayed __1__ in the light breeze. The quietness round me made me __2__ so at peace with myself as __3__ I was all alone on this vast African grassland.

I knew I __4__ not have wandered off this far from camp. The guide was quite insistent that no __5__ should go beyond fifty yards from the camp __6__. But it was my first trip on a __7__ and all I wanted to do was to look around and admire the great treeless land. I had no intention of __8__ hunting on my own. __9__, I was sure that no wild animal __10__ trying to venture too close to our camp.

I looked back at the riverside. Some of the men __11__ gathered __12__ the fire we made earlier. Two were bathing in the river. The Land Rovers stood in a ring round the camp, protecting us from the __13__. I could not hear the voices of the men but I was sure that they had not noticed __14__ absence.

I turned back and __15__ walking a few more paces to my right. Then I stopped. It was more because I had sensed rather than heard something. I __16__ my head slowly to my left. About six metres away from me was a large rock. Beside it was a __17__! It was looking straight at me.

I did not know __18__ long the big cat had been crouching there watching me. All I knew was the fear __19__ slowly crept into me. I had heard that a cheetah could run at a __20__ of up to 112 kilometres per hour. That made it a lot faster than me! What will become of me now? I don't want to die this young. For God's sake, I'm still a virgin!
